

In the Church of God schools, our teachers are volunteers. They have an unselfish spirit of dedication to children—a belief that Christian school ministry is their service to God. Christian education is a balance between home and school, in which the school is in partnership with the family to instill Christ-centered principles in the children to prepare them for the Lord's service. We want to do our part to help parents educate their children.

Parents can expect our teachers:

- To be mandated reporters of any sign of child abuse, bullying, sexual harassment, or general harassment.
- to be people of utmost integrity with high moral values, who are loving, caring, kind, and give their best effort for the students.
- to create a positive learning environment.
- to not discriminate on the basis of ethnicity, color, nationality, gender, family, income level, or academic skill level.
- to try to integrate Scriptural principles into all subjects and activities of the school, and to help maintain a spiritual atmosphere.
- to keep structured classrooms and be punctual, including having quarterly grades distributed in a timely manner.
- to have high academic goals for students and hold to the belief of no excuses and no exceptions.
- to help guide our students, not only academically, but also through life experiences.
- to help students make long-term life goals.
- to create literate learners.
- to keep an open line of communication between teachers and parents
- to lead students toward a deeper walk with Christ, equipping them with the knowledge, skills, and attitude for effective Christian service.
